Current Research Interests

My research is vitally linked to my teaching. My training is in economic development, international economics, political economy, international relations, and Latin American studies. My current emphasis is on good governance as related to industrial and science and technology policy. I am currently completing global comparative studies of competitiveness policies in the wine and wireless industries. I seek to train students who are well-versed in politics and economics, and able to pick up an area of technical specialization with policy relevance such as energy, education, or environment. I therefore seek out collaboration in key issue areas with researchers, policymakers, and the private sector, seeking to solve policy problems.

Teaching Philosophy
In my teaching, I emphasize critical thinking, writing and reading skills, as well as marrying theoretical constructs with practical and extended applications. I thoroughly believe in the value, and emphasize the application, of a liberal arts education. I incorporate my research in my teaching and use the teaching to develop my research ideas. My website reflects my emphasis and effort on guiding students towards good writing practices and research design. I have a strong track record of guiding outstanding students into activism, scholarly life, and the public service.
