Every day, every little piece of data we create contributes to a larger picture — one that reveals important details about our public selves and private lives. There is an emerging struggle and a pressing need to access and mobilize big data in the public interest. Please join us for a fascinating lecture series on the ethics of big data, whether in health care or politics, finance or science, and how the use of community-based big data can help solve real world problems in the public sphere.