Décadence itself is nothing to be fought: it is absolutely necessary and belongs to every age and to every people – Friedrich Nietzsche

Originating in the Latin roots de, meaning “apart/down” and cadere, meaning “to fall,” decadence came to signify decay, or a fall from a more vital state. Since, decadence has taken on a plurality of often contradictory meanings.

Coming into vogue near the end of the nineteenth century, the word decadence gestured toward decay in morality, religiosity, and spirituality in the areas of politics, literature, and aesthetics. The anti-traditionalist attitudes and enthusiasm of the writers and artists who came to define the decadence movement inspired a period of artistic output marked by perceived spoil, the fin de siècle. The decadent consciousness prioritized individual experience, rejected false promises of progress and welcomed excessive and sumptuous imagery. Beyond its radical embrace by creatives as a method of cultural production in the fin de siècle French context, the concept of decadence was and continues to be hijacked by the right-wing to criticize democracy and call for “purified” societies. Recent scholarship has worked to reclaim decadence, examining it as “an ingenious style complex, wise, full of nuances and refinements, forever extending the limits of language, borrowing from all technical lexicons, taking colours from every palette and notes from every musical instrument.”

The Department of Art History, Visual Art and Theory (AHVA) at the University of British Columbia is pleased to invite submissions for the 43rd Annual Graduate Symposium Decadence: Flows of Abundance and Decay to be held on Thursday, March 5 and Friday, March 6, 2020.

Decadence: Flows of Abundance and Decay will examine decadence as a generative force in understanding past and contemporary culture and politics. We invite papers from all periods of art history and related disciplines. Possible topics may include:

- Excess, consumption, decay, and decline
- Abjection and boundaries of the body
- Commodification and the accumulation of capital
- Desire, temptation, and extravagance
- Pleasure and fetishization
- Labour, production, and exploitation
- Self-indulgence, obsession, vice, and addiction

The AHVA Graduate Symposium organizing committee invites proposals for twenty-minute paper presentations. Current and recently graduated Master of Arts, Master of Fine Arts, doctoral and postdoctoral students, and students from various humanities fields whose research engages this year’s theme are encouraged to apply. Applicants should submit an abstract of no more than 300 words with the title of the paper, along with a separate document that includes a 250-word bio, to grad.symposium@ubc.ca by January 12, 2020. Please include your full name, affiliation, and contact information in your bio. As a blind panel will review all submissions, please ensure that your name and the title of your paper are included in your letter of introduction, but that your name and other identifying marks do not appear in the abstract. Decadence: Flows of Abundance and Decay will include a concurrent exhibition keeping with the theme of the symposium from March 5–6, 2020.
