The Mosaic Institute has just released a report entitled The Perception & Reality of “Imported Conflict” in Canada. Funded as part of the Government of Canada’s “Kanishka Project,” this report is the result of a ground-breaking, two-year study that asked almost 5,000 Canadians about their relationship to foreign conflicts and each other, as well as how the prism of Canadian pluralism affects how they view such ongoing challenges to peace.

JOHN MONAHAN is the Executive Director of the Mosaic Institute, a Toronto-based foreign policy “think and do” tank that engages young Canadians from diverse ethnocultural communities in the promotion of peace in regions of the world beset by entrenched conflict. Formerly a practising lawyer, civil servant and diplomat, John is an inaugural member of the Advisory Board of the Institute for Diaspora Research & Engagement (IDRE) at Simon Fraser University. Visit IDRE’s website at http://www.sfu.ca/diaspora-institute.html

For further information, please contact:

diaspora@sfu.ca

In partnership with the Institute for Diaspora Research & Engagement, this event is sponsored by: