Course Description:
Development has a human face and the face is gendered. This course examines how development is gendered and creates differential impacts, meanings, and processes for people in the Global South. Using an interdisciplinary approach, the course addresses, among others, some key questions in development: What does development mean to people in Asia, Africa and Latin America? Does gender matter? How do citizens participate in development processes and practices? What are the similarities and differences irrespective of genders, class, sexuality, age, and differential abilities? What are some of the inherent contradictions, such as, dilemmas, conflicts, and resistance, agency and structure in the gendered process of development? How are women, men, and diverse groups situated in socio-economic-political structure that eventually affect their contributions and experience in development?

Through feminist analysis and examples as well as case studies from Asia, Africa, and Latin America, this course aims at developing alternative frameworks, methods, and projects to attain the goals of economic and social justice, and equity.

Students are expected to learn the processes and structures of international agencies and organizations in development, and the active roles of various states and non-governmental organizations as well as grassroots movements in Asia, Africa, and Latin America.
