ONLINE COURSE AUTHOR and INSTRUCTOR

SFU Rehabilitation and Disability Management Program

SFU Lifelong Learning strives to be the leading provider of flexible, responsive education in British Columbia and beyond. We believe that lifelong learning not only imparts knowledge but also empowers and inspires participants to be change agents for their lives and communities. We mobilize learners by providing timely, targeted programming that helps them succeed in a fast-changing world.

SFU Lifelong Learning requires experienced Course Authors and Instructors to join our instructional team in the Rehabilitation and Disability Management program for the following online course:

Mental Health Issues in Rehabilitation and Disability Management

Mental health issues are the fastest-growing cause of absence from work. The economic impact is huge, and the cost in human suffering is immeasurable. In this course, learners will focus on how mental health problems affect the workplace, and how to create a healthy work environment. The course will cover the physical, personal and organizational consequences of mental health and what can be done at the prevention level. It will discuss helping workers who have a mental health condition make a safe and timely return to work.

This is a remote work contract posting. Course developers/instructors will not be required to work onsite.

Course Author: Responsibilities will include, (but not limited to):

In this role, you will join our instructional design team to create interactive asynchronous course materials for SFU’s Lifelong Learning, Rehabilitation & Disability Management Program, Mental Health Issues in Rehabilitation and Disability Management course. You will have an opportunity to apply your subject matter expertise, online teaching, instructional design, and project management skills in a dynamic and team-oriented environment.

- Work closely with SFU Lifelong Learning instructional design team and Flexible Teaching and Learning unit to create online course materials including assignments and assessments, including, but not limited to activities, projects and case studies.
- Apply vocational rehabilitation and disability management knowledge, theory and industry standards in the development of the new course.

Course Instructor: Responsibilities will include (but not limited to):

This role includes facilitating online instruction, evaluating/grading course participants through the use of class activities, assignments or other means, or a combination thereof.

Qualifications:

- Master’s degree in a relevant discipline
- Exceptional knowledge of industry standards and current practices in vocational rehabilitation and disability management, or human resources and disability management
• A relevant professional designation (e.g., RRP, CVRP, RTWDM, CDMP, CPHR) is preferred
• Experience delivering a learner-centered outcomes-based curriculum
• Experience in designing and delivering online asynchronous instruction
• Strong research and writing skills for developing online content
• Demonstrated ability to work collegially as a team member with a variety of teams and stakeholder groups
