FROM SYRIA TO CRIMEA
IS GLOBAL GOVERNANCE AT A LOSS?

The last 20 years have seen the birth of international criminal justice, a rapid expansion of the international human rights system, a focus on protection of civilians at the heart of humanitarian concerns, the growth of ambitious peacekeeping missions and the articulation of the new doctrine of responsibility to protect. Yet all this seems to have ground to a halt. Have we just reached the high-water mark of international interventions? Or are the doctrines and institutions of global conflict management in need of self-examination and reform?
