Exchange Location: American University of Sharjah, United Arab Emirates
Major: International Studies
Dates: Spring 2016 January 31 to May 28

Preparation for Exchange:

Having been undecided between an exchange to Malaysia, Turkey, or the United Arab Emirates, I consider myself to quite lucky to have been able to visit the American University of Sharjah located in the United Arab Emirates. Prior to my departure, I thoroughly researched trip preparation guidelines through the host university’s website as well as through various online trip advisory sources. This research was most definitely valuable information that allowed me to pack the necessary items needed for the cultural environment and climate of Sharjah. When packing, it is essential to include mainly light weight and loose clothing that will help in remaining cool in such a warm and humid climate. It is also crucial to remember that the cultural and legal norms of the United Arab Emirates require individuals to dress modestly, covering up to the shoulders and knees at all times. Coming from a Middle Eastern and Muslim background, complying with these cultural regulations was not as difficult for me as it was for other students coming from other regions around the globe. With this, it is quite useful to have a warmer set of clothing, such as a sweater, on hand if travelling to Sharjah during the winter months.

Upon arrival to either Dubai International Airport or Sharjah International Airport, the American University of Sharjah provides transportation to the campus if requested prior to a student’s arrival. The main mode of transportation for exchange students in the UAE is mainly the local taxi services and at times, the Dubai metro rail network. Access to cash at all times is quite helpful in order to utilize such forms of transportation. Students should ensure that they set up a bank account that will allow withdrawals abroad during their exchange. There are ATMs located throughout the campus, which is essential as the city of Sharjah is mainly a cash based culture. The city of Dubai, however, largely accepts all forms of payment, including debit, credit and cash. Although Sharjah is a less extravagant neighbour of Dubai, costs of living are either equal to or higher than that of Vancouver. When including costs of transportation, living expenses, and leisure expenses, I recommend that students budget strictly and accurately prior to and after their arrival. It is quite easy to be drawn to the luxurious culture and surroundings, forgetting one’s budget.

During Exchange: Arrival and Orientation:

The Spring 2016 semester in Sharjah officially began on January 31st, but exchange students were required to arrive a week prior to the start of the semester for the orientation processes. During the week of orientation, exchange students were invited to talks hosted by the IXO Exchange Office advisors who provided information regarding Emirati culture, university rules and regulations, as well as providing tips and advice on how to have the best study abroad experience. From my experience on an academic standpoint, while the lecture formats and schedules were quite similar to SFU, the university’s grading system held a passing grade of 70%, making classes much more competitive and driving students to adopt much more rigorous studying techniques. Students should also keep in mind that a greater emphasis on respect towards persons in positions of authority is placed, both within the university and the country overall. Students should refrain from initiating or contributing to political conversations that may be directed at the country’s political system and elite. This in fact, is considered a criminal offense and may negatively impact the student’s exchange experience. Respect is a significant pillar of Emirati culture and law and should be upheld in all situations.

The yearlong high temperatures and humidity of the country often limit the potential for various extra curricular activities; however, this depends on an individual’s environmental preference and pastime interests. Throughout the semester, volunteers and advisors at the exchange office will organize tours of the city as well as various entertaining trips and activities. The exchange group visited the majority of tourist spots in various Emirates in the Spring 2016 semester, as well as organizing a trip to the neighbouring Sultanate of Oman. Aside from these activities, students may visit the countless malls and indoor entertainment facilities, as well as many beaches and waterparks across the country. The weekend begins on Friday and ends on Saturday; this can be quite confusing at the beginning of the semester, but will ultimately become routine. Reflecting upon my experience, the malls in the UAE hold countless areas for entertainment including skating rinks, aquariums, amusements parks, and more. There are also numerous clubs and extra curricular opportunities within the university and on campus that exchange students are encouraged to take part in.

Reflection After Exchange:

Although I found my study abroad experience in the United Arab Emirates to have been quite pleasant, there are a few things that I would have appreciated knowing prior to my exchange. Students considering to study abroad in the American University of Sharjah should firstly keep in mind that although there are ATMs located across the campus, housing and accommodation payments are often paid in cash in the first few weeks upon arrival. Those who have withdrawal limits on their Debit or Credit cards should plan ahead, in order to have enough cash to make the required payments on time. Moreover, students should keep in mind that they might not necessarily be able to uphold their initial budget, as again, the Emirates is a more expensive economy. Student visas, permanent residence cards, and health check-ups are a few of the extra costs that must be paid throughout the semester. If these preparations are fully considered, students should expect to have a stress free and smooth study abroad process.

Throughout my time at the American University of Sharjah, I have been able to recognize various personal and academic strengths and weaknesses that I have been unaware of prior to this phase of my life. I believe that this was a result of learning to live on my own, away from family and friends, as well as the countless professors, peers, and friends that I met during my time in Sharjah. I was able to gain knowledge of various perspectives from around the globe, on life, education, politics and more. This allowed me to add even more colour and light to my outlook on life, and the world. I also recognized the extent of my own strength and independence when faced with a difficult situation abroad. Having been involved in a car accident in the second month after my arrival, I learned that although friends and family are crucial for one’s mental health and contentment, the strongest person to rely on is oneself. Being accustomed to help from others for my happiness and well being for the past few difficult years of my life, feeling this strength once again indubitably re-introduced a strong drive and sense of motivation in my life that I am very much grateful for.
