sustainable collective is a student-run website presenting thoughts and ideas on sustainability and the environment in the form of articles and infographics. Its mission is to inform and inspire readers, both local and global, on social, economic, and environmental sustainability.

The website is aiming for a launch date of February 1, 2014, and is looking for graduate students from various SFU departments who are interested in being a part of the team. Below are details of the positions we are seeking.

WRITING POSITIONS:
sustainable collective is seeking individuals interested in writing about sustainability and the environment in some of the following areas:

- Environment
- Business
- Economics
- Technology
- Food/Agriculture
- Politics/Policy
- Ecology
- Development
- Planning

EDITING POSITIONS:
sustainable collective is seeking individuals interested in working as editors, which all content will come through for the review and publishing process.

- Editor

OTHER POSITIONS:
sustainable collective is seeking individuals interested in maintaining the website’s Twitter account

- Social Media Coordinator

TO APPLY:
As these are volunteer positions intended for graduate students, demands are minimal and flexible. It is expected that writers are able to generate, on average, one article every two weeks. The topic-selection and writing will be largely self-guided, but teamwork between writers is encouraged.

If you are interested in writing about sustainability and the environment in any of the mentioned areas, please send a CV and a brief, one-paragraph cover letter to:

Joshua Cairns
jcairns@sfu.ca

Please include in the email’s subject line your name and the position you are interested in.