Current Research Interests

My research is vitally linked to my teaching. My general interests are in policy-oriented approaches to international political economy. My particular emphasis is on policy networks and industrial and science and technology policy in development contexts. Though I have been primarily a Latin Americanist, I am increasingly moving towards comparative work, particularly with East Asia.

updated: Apr. 27, 2007

While my early work focused on policy networks in macroeconomic policy decision-making, since 1999, I have moved towards microeconomic and industrial policy studies. I have completed studies on the energy sector in Latin America and East Asia, a comparative study of industrial policy in both regions, and examinations of outsourcing policies in China and India.

I am currently preparing study of Scandinavian and East Asian manufacturing and high technology sectors, which will be the basis of several grant proposals and articles in the coming years. See research grants section below.

New Course Preparation and Course Enhancement

2007	Attended a voice and speaking projection class through SFU LIDC.
2006	I created a webpage with information about classes and downloadable powerpoint lecture slides, to help students. It will be continually updated.
2005	I completed a new directed readings course for Patricia Rocha called "Brazil's Innovation System in International Perspective"
2004	I have completely revamped my FTAA course (now POL/LAS 450) to make it a writing-intensive one, with the help of the writing centre.
2004	I have prepared a new course, "Global AIDS Crisis in Colombia," for a directed readings course with my MA student, Ana Maria Bustamante.
2003	I have prepared a new course, "Power, Culture, and Identity," that will cover political culture theories with applications to Latin America, including studies of Inglehart, Gramsci, Foucault, postmodernism, and social movements. The course was a special topic in Spring '04, and then introduced as a regular offering.
2003	I have prepared a new course, "Special Topics in Globalization: Free Trade Area of the Americas," which was offered in Spring 2003 and cross-listed with Political Science, Sociology, and Latin American Studies.
2002	"Political Economy of Venezuela," for a directed readings course with Adam Morden.
2002	"Fair Trade and International Trade theory," including conducting a survey, for a readings course with Jared Ferrie.
2001	"Latin American Political Economy," by request for graduate students. I taught the course in Summer 2001.
2001	"International Relations of Latin America," for a directed readings course by Luis Garnica. The course is now offered as a regular offering from 2002-3.
2001	"Approaches and Methods of Latin American Studies," as the gateway course for graduate students interested in Latin America. The course will be offered regularly (in a 2 year cycle) as LAS 800.
2000	POLS/LAS 337, Politics of Selected Latin American Nations. While the course was previously listed, it has not been offered for some time. I have organized the course around basic country case studies of the major issues of contemporary Latin American politics: development and democracy.

Teaching Philosophy

In my teaching, I emphasize critical thinking, writing and reading skills, as well as marrying theoretical constructs with practical and extended applications. I thoroughly believe in the value, and emphasize the application, of a liberal arts education. I incorporate my research in my teaching and use the teaching to develop my research ideas. I have a strong track record of guiding outstanding students into activism, scholarly life, and the public service.
