Types of Routes

- Urban Trails are asphalt trails separated from roads and traffic. Urban Trails are intended for recreational cycling or cycle commuting. Often, Urban Trails are shared with in-line skaters, joggers and pedestrians. Urban Trails are also intended to provide greenway corridors throughout the City.
- Trans Canada Trail is primarily a gravel trail separated from traffic. For the section along Hastings Street, cyclists should detour via the Frances-Union Bikeway.
- Bikeways are signed routes, usually on quieter residential streets.
- Cycle Roads are roads which accommodate cycling through the provision of wider curb lanes. Cycle Roads are intended to be used for longer distance and commuter cycling by more confident cyclists. Cycle Roads are not usually signed.
- Shoulder Bike Lanes are paved shoulders on busier roads. They are usually marked with a bicycle logo on the pavement.
- Connectors fill in some of the gaps in the "official" bike network. These unofficial routes usually offer reasonably direct routes and moderate traffic volumes. They are often popular with cyclists, but have no special accommodations for bicycle traffic. Personal judgement is required in determining whether a particular route is suitable for your skill level.
