Christine Schwartz

Christine is a team member with the Children’s Health Policy Centre, within the Faculty of Health Sciences at SFU. She is the lead Scientific Writer for the Children’s Mental Health Research Quarterly, an electronic publication designed to inform policy-makers and practitioners about new research in children’s mental health. She has also co-authored government-commissioned reports on the prevalence of childhood mental disorders and effective interventions for preventing and treating these disorders. Christine’s teaching contributions have included supervising and mentoring graduate students and research trainees who are working on the Quarterly. She has also been a guest lecturer for senior undergraduate and graduate classes on children’s mental health. In addition to her work at SFU, Christine has a clinical psychology practice which focuses on providing evidence-based mental health services to adolescents who come into conflict with the law. For more information please visit http://childhealthpolicy.ca