MEMORANDUM

To SENATE

From SENATE COMMITTEE ON

UNDERGRADUATE STUDIES

Subject Archaeology 335-5: Special Topics in Archaeology

Date February 12, 1975

At its meeting of the 21st of January, Senate Committee on Undergraduate Studies considered the attached proposal for Archaeology 335-5: Special Topics in Archaeology. This proposal is now forwarded to Senate for its consideration, with the Committee's recommendation that it be approved.

While the Committee was unanimously in favour of offering such a course, a number of members expressed their concern that no examples had been given of the type of topic which was likely to be covered by such a course. In view of actions taken by the Committee and be Senate in the past in approving special topics courses without detailed outlines or statements of proposed topics, the majority of the Committee felt unable to delay consideration of the course on these grounds. However, the Dean of Arts undertook to secure from the Archaeology Department a list of possible topics to be offered in this course, a copy of which is attached to this recommendation.

According to your request, I have listed below some of the topics that might be taught under our proposed Special Topics course. These are by no means the only subjects that might be taught, nor do we wish to be held to having to teach each of them. They are simply examples of what might be covered.

Asian Prehistory
Oceanian Prehistory
European Prehistory
Ethnoarchaeology
Zooarchaeology
Experimental Archaeology
Primitive Technology
Museology
Conservation Archaeology
Pre-Columbian Art
Prehistoric and Primitive Art of Asia.
Prehistoric and Primitive Art of Oceania
Prehistoric and Primitive Art of Africa
Prehistoric and Primitive Art of North America
Human Paleoecology
Specific Problems in fossil man - for example, the Australopithicines, or the Neanderthals.
