MEMORANDUM

To..... Chairman, Senate Committee.....
..... on Undergraduate Studies.....
..... Proposal for a Restructuring of the Subject..... AME Program.....

From W.L. Cleveland, Co-ordinator,.....
AME Program.....
Date 20 October 1980.....

What follows is a slightly modified version of a document which has been approved by the AME Steering Committee and the FIDS Curriculum Committee. The modifications were either suggested by those two committees or by Mr. Evans, with whom I have reviewed the proposal.

1. Introduction

At its meeting of 20 March, 1980, the AME Steering Committee expressed general approval for a restructuring of the AME program along the lines suggested in this document. The Committee noted that while the individual courses associated with the minor usually attract adequate enrollments, students have not elected to qualify for the AME minor itself. Various members of the Committee expressed the view that part of the reason for this limited appeal may rest with the current structure of the minor, in particular its requirements for course selection from among both African and Middle Eastern content offerings. The proposal which is before you was designed to address this problem as well as one or two others.

The suggested changes have no scheduling implications, make no new demands on university resources, and do not constitute a curriculum revision in the way that term is normally applied. Those changes, great and small, are as follows:

1. Slight change of name to African/Middle Eastern Studies
2. The creation of two separate minors, African Studies and Middle Eastern Studies.

The Steering Committee regards this as a necessary step. Neither faculty nor students have shown much interest in participating in both areas. The separation of the two will recognize existing reality. It will not create any barriers for the student committed to studying both regions and it may, in fact, encourage others to become involved in the region which most interests them, knowing that they will not be required to become masters of both in order to obtain a minor.

3. The deletion of AME. 001-3.

The Committee now recognizes that in a curriculum which includes 100 division courses such as HIST 151 and HIST 146, it is a mistake to require, or even to offer, an 001 course. It has not played an integral role in our curriculum sequence. For example, in the current semester (80-3), the enrollment in HIST 151 (Introduction to the Modern Middle East) is 139 and that in HIST 146 (Africa since the Partition) is 42. Students have not been attracted to these courses by previously taking AME 001. Hence, the original argument for 001, that it was a kind of pre-100 division offering designed to draw students to the appropriate disciplinary courses at the 100 division, has not been proven in practice.

4. Credit hour change for AME. 401 and AME. 402
The Committee recommends that the credit hour value assigned to these courses be changed from 5 to 4 and that the courses have 4 hours of weekly contact. By making contact hours and credit hours identical, AME. courses will follow the system now practiced by the departments which are the main contributors to AME.
5. Slight reduction of the lists of associated faculty and courses with AME. content.
The Committee believes that a realistic list of faculty and core courses is the most effective method of giving minor programs a forceful identity. We wish therefore to strike from our calendar entry the names of those faculty and courses which have no direct bearing on the program.

Proposed Calendar Entry

AFRICAN/MIDDLE EASTERN STUDIES PROGRAM

Program Description

By coordinating selected courses offered across several Departments, the African/Middle Eastern Studies Program provides students with an opportunity to develop an interdisciplinary concentration in one of two areas of study. The curriculum includes two major languages, Arabic and Swahili, as well as optional course work in eight different departments, with particular emphasis on History and Sociology/Anthropology. The program leads to a minor degree in either African or Middle Eastern Studies.

AFRICAN STUDIES MINOR

Students must obtain nine hours of African content courses at the lower division as prerequisites. In addition, a minimum of 14 hours chosen from the list of approved African content courses, including AME. 401, must be taken at the 300 and 400 division ^{for the minor}. Courses from students' major departments may be counted toward fulfillment of the upper division requirements of the African Studies Minor provided that students not count the same courses toward the completion of both their major and their African Studies Minor.

Courses with African Content

The following course is offered under the direct sponsorship of the African/Middle Eastern Studies Program:

AME. 401-4 Studies in Africa.

A multi-disciplinary approach to selected topics in contemporary Africa. (Seminar)

Listed below are African content courses offered by various academic departments. Certain reading courses and selected topics courses may, with the approval of the Program Coordinator, be approved for an African Studies Minor.
