Stories of academic dishonesty (plagiarism, fabrication of data, etc.) have made headlines in the news in recent years. Deliberate acts of sabotage of other people's work, such as tampering with computer systems (introducing a "virus") or vandalizing controversial experiments, are probably even more harmful. While such occurrences are not nearly so common as the news media might lead one to believe, nevertheless, the problems are serious and must not be ignored. Dishonest behavior at the student level is a precursor to similar behavior at the professional level. It is important that we should inculcate standards of academic conduct, and deal effectively with the small number of offenders.
