HELLENIC STUDIES CERTIFICATE

Hellenic Studies is by definition an interdisciplinary field that has developed in the last decade. Generally Hellenic Studies is based on the study of Greek antiquity, Graeco-Roman civilization, the Byzantine Empire, the Ottoman period in Southeast Europe and Asia Minor and the modern Greek world. This spectrum of disciplines includes: language, literature, history, music, religion, archaeology, politics, philosophy, art, culture and civilization.

However, in North America Hellenic Studies is either offered within a department of Classics or in the form of interdisciplinary programs specializing in language (usually modern Greek), history or comparative literature. The challenge facing institutions that offer Hellenic Studies is to provide a pattern of courses that prepares the student to understand the fundamental elements of this new field, and channels that student in the specialization that can be accomplished within the resources of the institution.

The strength of Hellenic Studies at Simon Fraser University is based on history and language. Few institutions offer the opportunity for students to take a comprehensive study of Greek history complemented by a selection of courses in literature, philosophy and political science.

The Hellenic Studies Certificate at Simon Fraser University offers the student two avenues of study, one for those interested in acquiring a general knowledge, and another for those with an interest in graduate studies in history. In order to benefit from the interdisciplinary approach to this program, both types of student will complete a core of courses including history (ancient and modern) aspects of literature, political science and studies in antiquity.

The intention of the certificate is to provide the student with a basic understanding of the Hellenic world from ancient times to the present. Students will be exposed to several disciplines affording them the opportunity to establish an intellectual appreciation of both ancient and modern Hellenism.

CERTIFICATE IN HELLENIC STUDIES

The certificate, which requires a minimum of 24 hours of credit, is offered to both students with a general interest in Hellenic studies and students interested in pursuing graduate studies in Greek history. Students planning to pursue graduate studies in Greek history are advised to take two language courses.

It is the student's responsibility to ensure completion of prerequisites for upper division courses.
