MEMORANDUM

From: John T. Pierce
Dean of FASS

Subject: Institute for Critical Studies
In Gender and Health

Date: September 24, 2004

John, I am writing in support of the creation of the Institute for Critical Studies in Gender and Health.

SFU already has considerable research interests and expertise in this area. What the Institute will accomplish is to focus this expertise in an interdisciplinary context to further our understanding of the complex interrelationship of gender and health. The creation of the Institute will further strengthen SFU's growing reputation in health studies. Moreover, it should serve as an excellent vehicle to secure funding from CIHR and the Michael Smith Foundation.

I strongly support this initiative.

Dear Dr. Pierce:

Please find enclosed an application to establish the Institute for Critical Studies in Gender and Health (ICSGH) at Simon Fraser University.

The goal and research foci of ICSGH would contribute to SFU's Strategic Research Plan in the areas of i) Health, Genomics and Physiological Sciences and ii) History, Culture, Social Relations and Behaviour. The Institute would also complement the new Faculty of Health Sciences, and the Institute for Health Research and Education, whose defining feature is the integration of social and natural science research with population outcomes, societal application, and policy analysis. It would also contribute to the development of the Faculty of Arts and Social Sciences which has identified the area of Health and Public Policy as an emerging area of research. There is also the potential to create research linkages with Institutes and Centres at SFU including the Centre for Public Policy Research, Mental Health, Law and Policy Institute, Centre for Global Political Economy, Feminist Institute for Studies on Law and Society, and The FREDA Centre for Research on Violence against Women and Children.

In the province of British Columbia, the Institute is poised to become a key player in the Michael Smith Foundation's Networking Program, which has identified women's health among others as priorities for development in the province. The goal of the program is to provide resources to facilitate the development of robust, inclusive, productive networks that are competitive for national funding. Drs. Patton and Hankivsky are members of the task force which includes representatives from UBC, UNBC, UVIC and BC Women's and Children's Hospital. The task force is developing a formal proposal for a Women's Health Network to the Michael Smith Foundation for Health Research in September 2004 in which the Institute proposes to take a leadership role.

Nationally and internationally, the Centre also intends to work collaboratively with academics from other universities and research organizations with whom SFU faculty currently have established relations and to establish new relations with Centres that are engaged in complementary research: (e.g. Research Centre for Gender and Health- Australia)

Enclosed you will find a copy of our Constitution which includes a statement of ICSGH's purpose, relevant background information, provision for the appointment of a Director, a statement that recognizes the Institution's obligation to conduct its activities in accordance with University policies, and a statement of its internal governing procedure.

We have proposed a start date of November 1, 2004 and look forward to your response to this request.

Sincerely,

Cindy Patton, PhD
CRC Chair, Associate Professor (Women's Studies, Sociology/Anthropology)

Institute for Critical Studies in Gender and Health Simon Fraser University

Statement of Purpose

The goal of the proposed Institute for Critical Studies in Gender and Health (ICSGH) is to conduct interdisciplinary research and scholarship on all aspects of gender-related health and health care.

Building on the strength of researchers whose work is directly situated or relevant to the area of gender and health (see Appendix A), the ICSGH will focus on the following streams of research:

- Innovative Research Methodologies
- Policy, Politics, and Research
- Health and Technology
- International Health and Globalization
- Health Inequalities
- Sexuality and Health
- Sustainability

The Institute will anchor a vibrant interdisciplinary community of scholars, researchers and students, and facilitates collegial exchange through seminars devoted to directed readings, lectures, and annual conferences. Annual conferences will bring together local, national and international scholars from a number of disciplines and areas of research to consider conceptual and practical issues related to the Institute's research mandate. The proposed exchanges will provide space for discussion and debate, the potential for the development of intellectual networks and collaborative partnerships, and opportunities for producing new and original research.

Contribution to SFU Community and Beyond

The goal and research foci of ICSGH would contribute to SFU's Strategic Research Plan in the areas of i) Health, Genomics and Physiological Sciences and ii) History, Culture, Social Relations and Behaviour. The Institute would also complement the new Faculty of Health Sciences, and the Institute for Health Research and Education, whose defining feature is the integration of social and natural science research with population outcomes, societal application, and policy analysis. It would also contribute to the development of the Faculty of Arts and Social Sciences which has identified the area of Health and Public Policy as an emerging area of research. There is also the potential to create research linkages with Institutes and Centres at SFU including the Centre for Public Policy Research, Mental Health, Law and Policy Institute, Centre for Global Political Economy, Feminist Institute for Studies on Law and Society, and The FREDA Centre for Research on Violence against Women and Children.

In the province of British Columbia, the Institute is poised to become a key player in the Michael Smith Foundation's Networking Program, which has identified women's health among others as priorities for development in the province. The goal of the program is to provide resources to facilitate the development of robust, inclusive, productive networks that are competitive for national funding. Drs. Patton and Hankivsky are members of the task force which includes representatives from UBC, UNBC, UVIC and BC Women's and Children's Hospital. The task force is developing a formal proposal for a Women's Health Network to the Michael Smith Foundation for Health Research in September 2004 in which the Institute proposes to take a leadership role.

Nationally and internationally, the Centre also intends to work collaboratively with academics from other universities and research organizations with whom SFU faculty currently have established relations and to establish new relations with Centres that are engaged in complementary research: (e.g. Research Centre for Gender and Health- Australia)
