FACULTY OF BUSINESS ADMINISTRATION

Memo

To: Wade Parkhouse, Dean of Graduate Studies

From: Colleen Collins, Associate Dean, Graduate Programs

Date: February 16, 2012

Re: GDBA Course and Calendar Changes

Dear Wade,

The SFU GDBA program would like to combine our two existing Accounting courses into one course.

The changes we are requesting are as follows:

- A change to program requirements by deleting BUS 550 Financial Accounting and BUS 551 Managerial Accounting
- Addition of a new course BUS 510 Financial and Managerial Accounting to replace BUS 550 & 551
- Calendar language changes

From: Graduate Diploma in Business Administration Beedie School of Business Simon Fraser University Calendar 2012 Fall The graduate diploma in business administration (GDBA) provides core business skills to those with an undergraduate degree in a discipline other than business. learning. This is fundamental to cooperative learning. This means you must come to class and actively follow the discussion.

Using these parameters, the following table compares the traditional seminar in the classroom to the Bus510 online seminar.

Traditional graduate seminar	Bus510 On-line Seminar
Before class: You read the textbook and the assigned case and prepare notes or questions. Often teams are used at the post-graduate level. The teams meet and prepare a team summary of their interpretation of the case. Note that often there is no lecture in a graduate course as might be experienced in an undergraduate course. Day of class: Meet at the physical classroom for a 4-hour class on a specific day. If you can't attend, you must rely on someone else to share his/her notes. The teams hand in their summary at the start of the class. The instructor scans them for appropriate analysis. Discussion: Generally the class responds to the instructor's initial questions then students' responses and questions fill the discussion time. Solicited responses (cold calls) might occur by asking a student what his/her opinion is on an issue. You listen and take notes during the discussion. The seminar instructor listens, corrects misconceptions but generally is not necessarily the leader or an active participant. It is assumed that the facilitator only intervenes when necessary. The discussion is limited to the class time and to your thoughts at that time. You must be able to synthesize the issues quickly.	The same preparation activities occur in an online course except that the team meeting may be online. Some teams rely on emails with file attachments. Regardless of how the team meets, everyone must keep up with the work by reading the textbook and preparing the assignments. The online seminar occurs over the extended period from Tuesday to Friday. If you can't attend one day, you can catch up by reading the messages in WebCT. All discussion is archived. It is estimated that you might be online for about 6 to 8 hours in total over the discussion time block. Team summaries are submitted Sunday night and reviewed Monday. The online discussion starts in much the same way as in the traditional seminar except it is conducted in the WebCT. Just like in the f-2-f environment, students need to take the initiative to actively participate and ask questions. Therefore, while leading questions are posted, additional issues will arise depending on the depth and breadth of the class discussion which might require further research resulting in Internet links. Generally students benefit from reading messages then responding instead of having to listen, synthesize and take notes at the same time. Your notes are more easily integrated as the complete discussion is archived in WebCT and can be reviewed and downloaded. In the discussion, similar to f-2-f, the instructor interjects only as needed.

Faculty

Dianne Cyr, PhD

Dianne Cyr is an Associate Professor in Management Information Systems at SFU. In the GDBA she delivers Human Resource Management and Organizational Behaviour (Business 557), which she has been teaching in the GDBA program since 2005. In the realm of research, she leads a government funded project titled "Managing E-loyalty through Design". This investigation is focused on how trust, satisfaction, and loyalty are built in online business environments through website design. Unique features of this work are comparisons across cultures, genders, and concerning applications to mobile devices. Further details of these research projects may be accessed at www.loyalty.ca. Dianne is the author of five books and over 40 research articles. Career details may be found at www.dianne Cyr.com.

Barb Edwards, MAcc, CA

Barb Edwards is a Senior Lecturer of Accounting for SFU. Within the GDBA she teaches Financial Accounting and Managerial Accounting.

Ms. Edwards was awarded the Canada Trust Teaching Award (2001) and has been on the Teaching Honour Roll. Her interests are related to effective and efficient teaching of quality online courses through the use of cases and teams.

Charles King, MBA

Charles King's professional background includes 14 years of experience in the real estate industry, the public sector, and non-profit and private sectors including the Urban Development Institute, Coopers & Lybrand Consulting Group, and the City of Vancouver. In his current position with Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation, Charles is responsible for analyzing the BC economy and housing market in support of CMHC market analysis, underwriting, and default management. Within the GDBA Charles teaches Managerial Finance.

Mr. King holds two masters degrees with a concentration in urban land economics, financial economics, and strategic management.

Mark A. Moore, PhD

Mark Moore is a Lecturer in the Faculty of Business Administration at SFU. In addition to his work for the GDBA, he has taught courses for the Management of Technology (MOT) MBA, the Executive MBA, and the Learning Strategies Group. Within the GDBA program he teaches BUS 552: Managerial Economics.

Prior to coming to SFU, Dr. Moore was employed by the Bank of Canada in Ottawa, where he conducted research on monetary policy, international portfolio, direct investment flows and options pricing methods. He also served as a consultant to Bankers Trust Company in New York, where he performed risk modeling and analysis of the loan portfolio.

His current research is on further analysis of the softwood lumber dispute. He is also investigating the consequences for consumers, government and shareholders of the privatization of Canadian National.

Blaize Reich, PhD

Blaize Reich came to academia after 15 years as an information technology (IT) professional and consultant to industry in both Canada and Asia. Dr. Reich is a professor of information technology and an internationally respected researcher and speaker. Within the GDBA program, she teaches Management Information Systems.

She currently holds a prestigious Social Sciences and Humanities Research Council Initiative on the New Economy grant to investigate how knowledge management theory might improve IT project success and is collaborating with colleagues at Oxford and Ohio State universities on this project. Dr. Reich also served as Associate Dean of the Beedie School of Business from 2000-2003 and was awarded the Canada Trust Distinguished Teaching award in 1997.

Zorana Svedic, MBA

Zorana Svedic is a lecturer at SFU in the GDBA program where she teaches BUS 553: Quantitative Business Methods.

Her main research interests are interface and instructional design, particularly, the culturally sensitive interface design; and e-Learning applications for graduate business programs.

"The GDBA provided an opportunity to learn core business courses at the graduate level with the flexibility to work full-time."
